EU SLAMS ANKARA OVER PROTESTS, GOVERNMENT FURIOUS

- Tensions run high between EU and Turkey following a highly critical European Parliament resolution

Ankara ramped up the tension in its showdown with the European Union, following a highly critical European Parliament statement regarding the Turkish government's crackdown on Gezi Park protesters.

While Ankara declared the European Parliament statement "null and void," a number of EU member states, as well as the United States, also received their share from the Turkish government's anger.

Prime Minister Recep Tayyip Erdoğan said he would "not recognize" any decision of the European body regarding Turkey.

Addressing his party members yesterday, Erdoğan reminded of the economic crisis that swept Greece recently, which led to large protests lasting for months. "I do not recognize a decision that the European Parliament will make about us. Those who make this decision should first look at Greece. When people and police were confronted in Greece, I wonder if EU officials, even the 'eurozone' did anything else other than giving them money," he said.

"Just yesterday and the day before, in Britain, more than 30 protesters were arrested during the protests against the G-8," he said. "What did the European Parliament say about Britain, their own member? Right now Turkey is not a member of the EU, it is a negotiator. How come you can make a decision about me? Is this within your limits?" Erdoğan added.

He also criticized Stefan Füle, European Union Commissioner responsible for the enlargement, for the Twitter message in which the commissioner expressed disappointment about the government's approach to the Gezi Park incidents.

Erdoğan dismissively referred to the commissioner as "That one who is responsible for the expansion of the union." Referring to a recent joint conference where he met with the EU commissioner in Istanbul, Erdoğan said, "He did not once give me a counter-argument during his time with me, and then exited the room and tweeted."

European voice

What started as a small and localized gathering to prevent a public park in the center of Istanbul from being turned into yet another shopping mall has now been transformed into the most widespread protest movement witnessed in Turkey. Within days, protests spread from Istanbul to many other Turkish provinces. The protesters represent a liberal coalition including NGO activists, seculars, Kurdish activists, university professors, opposition parties, youth and football club supporters. What unites them is not ideology but a common exasperation with the Turkish Prime Minister Recep Tayyip Erdoğan's majority rule.

Over the past decade, Erdoğan has overseen a radical transformation of Turkey. He has greatly extended Turkey's influence regionally and in global affairs based on the economy's sustainable and inclusive growth. He has also moved Turkey towards the norms of a better democracy by bringing the military under civilian control and by passing a series of democratic reforms that extended individual freedoms. Yet most of these accomplishments were in the first decade of the millenium.

/.../ Erdoğan's political success has much to do with his pragmatism. He has demonstrated in the past that he can be pragmatic. He is currently the only person in Turkey that can defuse this conflict. He only needs to empathise with the core arguments of the protesters and state that he will be more inclusive in future policymaking. He has, however, opted for further polarisation, believing that he can subdue the protest movement.

With the imminent prospect of a chapter of the EU accession negotiations being opened after a hiatus of 36 months, the European Union is faced with a hard choice. An intergovernmental conference scheduled for 26 June is expected to give the go-ahead for the opening of the chapter on regional policy. That will be the 14th chapter to be opened for negotiations with a country that started talks on the same day as Croatia, which will join the EU on 1 July. Currently, no chapters can be closed because of differences over Cyprus.

- The Astonishing Likeness of Turkey and Russia

There are a number of similarities between Turkey and Russia. Both used to have powerful empires, with much of their territory situated outside Europe. Both started their modernization late, in the second half of the nineteenth century, went through catastrophes of war and revolution at the beginning of the twentieth, and, as a consequence, had to reinvent themselves as nations.

Both are now going through a second wave of modernization of their economies, societies, and polities. Both are treated as outsiders by Europeans: the Turks, because they are many and Muslim; the Russians, because they are largely Christian Orthodox, and used to be Communist. And, crucially, both deserve the attention of the EU, which needs to rethink its relations with its two largest neighbors.

"SERBIEN WIRD SEINE CHANCE NUTZEN"

Suzana Grubješić, stellvertretende Premierministerin der Republik Serbien, spricht über die EU-Annäherung ihres Landes

"Wir könnten schon morgen Beitrittsverhandlungen mit der EU aufnehmen," sagte Grubješić, die zudem Europa-Ministerin der Belgrader Regierung ist. Mit den nötigen Reformen sei man weit vorangekommen. Geplant ist, im Herbst mit Gesprächen zu beginnen – vorausgesetzt, der Europäische Rat gibt Ende Juni grünes Licht. Alles hänge nun von der Kosovo-Frage ab, so die Ministerin im Gespräch mit Paul Freiherr von Maltzahn, Generalsekretär der DGAP, und Gästen.
